The Ultimate Driving Machine

The new BMW M3 CSL.

The secret of performance: Increase power. Decrease weight. So we built all of our motorsport experience into one car. A carbon-fibre roof, an aluminium bonnet and an extra-thin glass rear window lowered its weight coefficient to 3.85 kg/bhp. We added a mighty straight-six engine with a breathtaking 265 kW (360 bhp) and 370 Nm of torque at 4,900 rpm. And we refined the car's sports suspension for the ultimate in agility and precision.

And what happens when intelligent lightweight technology meets power on this scale? You'll feel the forces of physics at their most monumental as the Formula 1-like Launch Control thrusts your back into the bucket seat. Or when the super-direct steering tightens every muscle in your arms as you encounter the full lateral acceleration of a curve. Take our advice. Make sure your physical condition matches that of the M3 CSL.
